Dear Students,

While it's wonderful to start college, it's crucial to avoid ragging. Any physical or psychologically harmful behaviour, such as shouting at someone, making them perform embarrassing tasks, or even acting physically aggressive, is considered ragging. Although it may appear like a custom, breaking this rule is a serious infraction that can land you in court or perhaps be expelled. More significantly, it might cause someone to become so miserable that they give up on college entirely.

Let's ensure that everyone has a great time at college. Don't stand by and watch someone get ragged. Inform your dorm leader, an instructor, or the Anti-Ragging Committee (which is present at most colleges). Anonymous reporting is also permitted at certain institutions. Discuss ragging with your friends as well. If someone confides in you, be there to support them and assist in reporting it. Recall that a college that is welcoming and safe is one that everyone will enjoy. It is important for you to feel appreciated, and speaking up can have a significant impact.

Anti- Ragging Cell-2022-2023
Report 2022-2023

- For the academic year 2022–2023, newly admitted students receive an affidavit against discrimination. Every student must swear under penalty of law that they will neither engage in nor promote ragging within the College. It is also made plain that there will be severe repercussions and legal action for any instances of ragging at the College. To increase awareness, there are several anti-ragging posters posted all over the college grounds.
- Newly admitted students are given a thorough orientation program that covers the college's anti-ragging policies. This includes letting people know about the Anti-Ragging reporting forms and the Anti-Ragging helpline number. The website provides the anti-ragging committee's contact details for ease of access in the event of any ragging incident. Consequently, the committee has not received a single complaint regarding any incident of ragging. Nonetheless, ragging awareness campaigns are a common practice on campuses.

Justification:

The anti-ragging report and circular for the academic year 2022-2023 reinforced the Ganesar College of Arts and Science's unwavering dedication to maintaining a ragging-free environment. By requiring affidavits against ragging and clearly stating the severe consequences for such actions, the college emphasizes its zero-tolerance stance. The comprehensive orientation program, coupled with the prominent display of anti-ragging posters and accessible contact information for the Anti-Ragging Committee, ensures that students are well-informed and supported. The college's proactive measures, including the establishment of a dedicated Anti-Ragging Cell, demonstrate its commitment to preventing ragging and fostering a safe and respectful academic community. The absence of reported incidents highlights the effectiveness of these efforts, underscoring the success of the college's continuous awareness campaigns in promoting a harassment-free environment for all students.
